

NOTES OF CONTRIBUTORS

Jon Altschul is assistant professor in the Department of Philosophy at the Loyola University New Orleans. His research up until now has been focused on answering the general question of what makes us warranted in our ordinary, common beliefs about the world. His publications include “Vahid, Burge, and Perceptual Entitlement” (with Anthony Brueckner and Christopher Buford, Metaphilosophy, 2014), “Entitlement, Justification, and the Bootstrapping Problem” (Acta Analytica, 2012), and “Reliabilism and Brains in Vats” (Acta Analytica, 2011). Contact: jlaltsch@loyno.edu

Michael Da Silva is an SJD candidate at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law where he is a Vanier Canada Graduate Scholar, a CIHR Training Fellow in Health Law, Ethics and Philosophy and a Graduate Fellow in the Centre for Ethics. His philosophical research interests include ethics, legal philosophy, social and political philosophy and epistemology. His legal research focuses on public law, including (comparative) constitutional law. His other published works include pieces in the Canadian Journal of Law and Jurisprudence and Criminal Justice Ethics. Contact: mike.dasilva@mail.utoronto.ca.

Benoit Gaultier is currently a postdoctoral research fellow at the University of Helsinki, after having been a research assistant at the Collège de France. His main areas of interest are epistemology, philosophy of action, metaphysics, and pragmatism. He has several papers under review and forthcoming. He has two books forthcoming in September 2014: Qu'est-ce que le pragmatisme? (Paris, Vrin); Connaître. Questions d'épistémologie contemporaine (editor, with Jean-Marie Chevalier, Paris, Ithaque). Contact: benoitgaultier@hotmail.fr.

Franz Huber is an assistant professor in the Department of Philosophy at the University of Toronto. His research interests are in formal epistemology, general philosophy of science, and philosophical logic. With Jonathan Weisberg and many others he is editing Ergo, An Open Access Journal of Philosophy. His most recent articles include: “For True Conditionalizers Weisberg’s Paradox is a False Alarm” (Symposion, 2014), “What Should I Believe About What Would Have Been the Case?” (Journal of Philosophical Logic, 2014), and “New Foundations for Counterfactuals” (Synthese, 2014). Contact: franz.huber@utoronto.ca.

Moti Mizrahi is Assistant Professor in the Philosophy Department at St. John's University. He works in argumentation, epistemology, metaphilosophy, and philosophy of science. His recent publications include "Constructive Empiricism: Normative or Descriptive?" (International Journal of Philosophical Studies, forthcoming), "Don't Believe the Hype: Why Should Philosophical Theories Yield to Intuitions?" (Teorema, forthcoming), "Kuhn's Incommensurability Thesis: What's the Argument?" (Social Epistemology, forthcoming). "Does Conceivability Entail Metaphysical Possibility?" (with David R. Morrow, Ratio, 2014), "The Role of Justification in the Ordinary Concept of Scientific Progress" (with Wesley Buckwalter, Journal for General Philosophy of Science, 2014), and "Phenomenal Conservatism, Justification, and Self-Defeat" (Logos & Episteme, 2014). Contact: motimizra@gmail.com.

Timothy Perrine is a PhD candidate at Indiana University, Bloomington. His primary research interests are epistemology, philosophy of religion, and ethics. His most recent publications are "In Defense of Non-Reductionism in the Epistemology of Testimony" (Synthese, forthcoming), "Envy and Its Discontents" (with Kevin Timpe, in Virtues and Their Vices, Oxford University Press, 2014), and "Skeptical Theism, Abductive Atheology, and Theory Versioning" (with Stephen Wykstra, in Skeptical Theism: New Essays, Oxford University Press, 2014). Contact: tperrine@indiana.edu.

Michael S. Perry is a philosopher, lawyer, and author who currently resides in Gig Harbor, WA. He received his AB in Philosophy from Dartmouth College (2003) and his MA and Ph.D. in Philosophy from Johns Hopkins University (2005, 2009). He also holds a JD from the University of Michigan Law School (2012). He is academically interested in many areas of philosophy and law, and in particular inquiries into how we should understand an issue or domain of inquiry. Recent work has focused on epistemology and ethics. He is the author of Epistemology in the Shadow of Pyrrhonism (ProQuest, UMI Dissertation Publishing, 2011) and Moral Dilemmas, Identity, and Our Moral Condition (Algora Press, 2014). Contact: michael.shaw.perry@gmail.com.

Pierre Uzan is a researcher at laboratory SPHERE of History and Philosophy of Science, University Paris-Diderot/CNRS. His main areas of research are in Philosophy of Quantum Mechanics, Quantum Logic and Philosophy of Mind. He has suggested to explain the nature of psychophysical correlations in terms of (generalized) entanglement, without appealing to a concept of causality and without identifying mind and brain. His recent publications include Conscience et physique quantique (ed. Vrin, Paris) and several articles bearing on the quantum-like modelling of the psychosomatic unity of the individual, like “On the nature of psychophysical correlations” (Mind and Matter, 2014). Contact: pierre.uzan@paris7.jussieu.fr.