

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Christopher Bobier is a graduate student at the University of California, Irvine. His main areas of research are in metaphysics, epistemology and the philosophy of science. His most recent publications include “The Conciliatory View and the Charge of Wholesale Skepticism” (Logos & Episteme, 2012), and “God, Time and the Kalam Cosmological Argument” (forthcoming in Sophia, 2013). Contact: cbobier@uci.edu.

Tomas Bogardus is an Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Pepperdine University in Malibu, California. He received his Ph.D. in 2011 from the University of Texas at Austin. His main areas of research lie within the philosophy of mind and epistemology. His recent publications include “Undefeated Dualism” (Philosophical Studies, forthcoming), “Knowledge Under Threat” (Philosophy and Phenomenological Research, forthcoming), “The Problem of Contingency for Religious Belief” (Faith and Philosophy, forthcoming), and “Disagreeing with the (Religious) Skeptic” (International Journal for Philosophy of Religion, forthcoming). Contact: tbogardus@gmail.com.

Fernando Broncano-Berrocal is a PhD candidate at the University of Girona and a student member of LOGOS (Logic, Language and Cognition Research Group), which is based at the University of Barcelona. His main area of research is epistemology (virtue epistemology, safety, epistemic luck). Contact: ferbroncano@gmail.com.

Natalia Grincheva is a PhD researcher in the Centre for Interdisciplinary Studies in Society and Culture (CISSC) at Concordia University. Her doctoral research encompasses new museology, cultural diplomacy, and social media. Her project focuses on the use of social media in museums' international outreach and diplomatic activities and aims to evaluate the impact of cultural diplomacy programs implemented online within a museum context. Her most recent publication is “‘Psychopower’ of Cultural Diplomacy in the Information Age” published by the USC Center on Public Diplomacy (Figueroa Press) as a part of their Series Perspectives on Public Diplomacy. Contact: grincheva@gmail.com.

Clayton Littlejohn is Lecturer with the Department of Philosophy at King's College London. His main areas of research are in epistemology and ethical theory. He is the author of Justification and the Truth-Connection (Cambridge University Press, 2012), a monograph on the internalism-externalism debate in epistemology. Currently, he is co-editing Epistemic Norms (Oxford University Press, forthcoming) with John Turri and writing This is Epistemology (Wiley-Blackwell, forthcoming), an introduction to epistemology. Contact: clayton.littlejohn@kcl.ac.uk.

Christian Möckel is Professor of Philosophy at Humboldt-University (Berlin). His academic interests include Ernst Cassirer's work, Husserl's phenomenology, political philosophy and the relationship between Life and Reason in its multiple philosophical aspects. He is the editor of the following posthumous volumes by Ernst Cassirer (ECN): vol. 9 (2008), vol. 4 (2011), and vol. 16 (2013). His books include Das Urphänomen des Leben. Der Lebensbegriff Ernst Cassirers (2005), Phänomenologie. Probleme, Bezüge, Interpretationen (2003), and Einführung in die transzendente Phänomenologie (1998). Contact: MoeckelC@Philosophie.hu-berlin.de.

Charlie Pelling is a lecturer in philosophy at Birkbeck, University of London. He works mainly in philosophy of language, epistemology, and philosophy of mind. His recent articles include "Assertion, Telling, and Epistemic Norms" (Australasian Journal of Philosophy, forthcoming), "Assertion and Safety" (Synthese, forthcoming), and "Testimony, Testimonial Belief, and Safety" (Philosophical Studies, forthcoming). Contact: c.pelling@bbk.ac.uk.

Stephen Skerry is a philosopher interested in epistemology, the philosophy of mathematics and medical informatics. His training was at the University of Massachusetts (MA 1979) and Harvard University (BA 1974). He worked for 22 years in the medical informatics field for IDX Systems Corp. and currently teaches mathematics at Pope John XXIII High School. Contact: sskerry@popejohnhs.org.

Nicholas Tebben is a lecturer in philosophy at Towson University. The main branch of his research focuses on social epistemology and pragmatism. He is the author of "On the Prospects for Naturalism," forthcoming in Heisenberg et al. eds. Metaphysics or Modernity? (Bamberg: University of Bamberg Press). Contact: ntebben@towson.edu.