

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Mark Alfano is associate professor of philosophy at Delft University of Technology. He works on moral psychology, broadly construed to include ethics, epistemology, philosophy of mind, and philosophy of psychology. He also maintains an interest in Nietzsche, focusing on Nietzsche's psychological views. His papers have appeared in numerous journals, including Philosophical Quarterly, The Monist, Erkenntnis, Synthese, and the British Journal for the History of Philosophy. He has recently published two monographs Character as Moral Fiction and Moral Psychology: An Introduction, as well as the edited volume Current Controversies in Virtue Theory. His forthcoming series of edited volumes on The Moral Psychology of the Emotions will include books on contempt, anger, disgust, pride, compassion, and forgiveness. Contact: mark.alfano@gmail.com.

J. Adam Carter is Lecturer in Philosophy (Epistemology) at the University of Glasgow. His main research interests are in epistemology, philosophy of mind, relativism, philosophy of language, and bioethics. He is the author of Metaepistemology and Relativism (Palgrave Macmillan, 2016), co-author, with Ted Poston, of Knowledge-How: A Contemporary Introduction (Continuum, forthcoming), and co-editor of Knowledge-First: Approaches in Epistemology and Mind (with Emma C. Gordon and Benjamin Jarvis, Oxford University Press, 2016). His most recent journal articles include "(Anti)-Anti-Intellectualism and the Sufficiency Thesis" (with Bolesław Czarnecki, Pacific Philosophical Quarterly, forthcoming), "Virtuous Insightfulness" (Episteme, forthcoming), and "Meta-Epistemic Defeat" (Synthese, forthcoming). Contact: J.Adam.Carter@ed.ac.uk, jadamcarter@gmail.com.

Starting in August of 2016, Ian Church joined Hillsdale College as a Visiting Assistant Professor of Philosophy. He is a Co-Principal Investigator on the Intellectual Humility MOOC project at the Eidyn centre at the University of Edinburgh. He finished his PhD in the St Andrews-Stirling Joint Programme in Philosophy in 2012. His dissertation focused on virtue epistemology and the analysis of knowledge, and his current research includes work on intellectual virtues, the Gettier Problem, epistemic luck, fallibilism, disagreement, the interface between epistemology and ethics, non-reductive models of knowledge, intuitions, religious epistemology, philosophy of psychology, and cognitive science. Contact: ian.m.church@gmail.com, ichurch@hillsdale.edu.

Andrea R. English is Chancellor's Fellow in Philosophy of Education at the University of Edinburgh and Senior Fellow of the Higher Education Academy. She is author of Discontinuity in Learning: Dewey, Herbart, and Education as Transformation (Cambridge University Press, 2013), co-editor with Leonard J. Waks of John Dewey's Democracy and Education: A Centennial Handbook (Cambridge University Press, 2017), and has several publications in international journals and edited volumes. Her research focuses on dialogue, listening, critical thinking, and the moral dimensions of teaching and learning. She is on the John Dewey Society board of directors and leads the Edinburgh branch of the Philosophy of Education Society of Great Britain, as well as an international research group on listening in education "Listening Study Group." Contact: Andrea.English@ed.ac.uk.

Modesto Gómez-Alonso is currently Senior Lecturer of Philosophy at the Catholic University of Salamanca, as well as Visiting Researcher at the EIDYN Research Centre, University of Edinburgh. His research interests include virtue epistemology, radical scepticism, and the metaphysics of dispositions. Some of his recent publications include "Against a Nomic Virtue Epistemology" (forthcoming in Análisis. Revista de Investigación filosófica, 2016), "Wittgenstein on the Will and Voluntary Action," in Action, Decision-Making, and Forms of Life, ed. Jesús Padilla Gálvez (De Gruyter, 2016), and "Descartes on the Intellectual Nature of Human Sense Perception" (Análisis. Revista de Investigación filosófica, 2015). Contact: modestomga@hotmail.com.

Emma C. Gordon is a postdoctoral research fellow on the Intellectual Humility project at the University of Edinburgh. She is the co-editor of Knowledge-First: Approaches in Epistemology and Mind (with J. Adam Carter and Benjamin Jarvis, Oxford University Press, 2016) and The Moral Psychology of Pride (with J. Adam Carter, Rowman and Littlefield, 2017). Her journal articles include "Extended Emotion" (with J. Adam Carter and S. Orestis Palermos, Philosophical Psychology, 2016), "Openmindedness and Truth" (with J. Adam Carter, Canadian Journal of Philosophy, 2014), and "Is There Propositional Understanding?" (Logos & Episteme, 2012). Contact: emma.catherine.gordon@gmail.com.

Brian Robinson is an Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Texas A&M University-Kingsville. Brian Robinson's research focuses on the confluence of moral psychology and philosophy of language. Much of his recent research has focused on defining and measuring intellectual humility. He has also published on various immoral speech acts, experimental philosophy, and business ethics. A second research area, in conjunction with the Toolbox Project at Michigan State University, focuses on the nature and methods of interdisciplinary scientific research and the benefits philosophy can add to such research. Contact: brian.robinson@tamuk.edu.

Alessandra Tanesini is Professor of Philosophy at Cardiff University. She is the author of An Introduction to Feminist Epistemologies (Blackwell, 1999), of Wittgenstein: A Feminist Interpretation (Polity, 2004), and of several articles in feminist philosophy, the philosophy of mind and language, epistemology and on Nietzsche. Her current work lies at the intersection of ethics and epistemology and focuses on epistemic vice, prejudice and ignorance. Contact: Tanesini@cardiff.ac.uk.