

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Frederik J. Andersen is a PhD student at the Arché Philosophical Research Centre for Logic, Language, Metaphysics, and Epistemology, University of St Andrews. His main research interests are in epistemology and logic. Recently, he published the paper “Moral Disagreement and Higher-Order Evidence” with Klemens Kappel in Ethical Theory and Moral Practice. Contact: frederikjandersen@gmail.com.

Daniele Bertini is adjunct professor of Philosophy at the University of Rome 2, Tor Vergata. While he specialized in analytic philosophy of religion, he is competent in overlapping disciplines as history of religious doctrines (especially Christian Theology), philosophy of language, and epistemology. His works focus mainly on the epistemology of religious belief and the challenge of religious diversity. He authored four books (on George Berkeley, the History of Christian Theology, and the problem of Religious Diversity), three collections (on the role of experience in Theology, on moral heteronomy, and on relations), and published in journals as Dialegethai, International Journal of Philosophy and Theology, Religions, European Journal for Philosophy of Religion, and Philosophia. Contact: daniele.bertini@uniroma2.it.

Nicole Dular is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Franklin College. She received her PhD from Syracuse University in 2017. Her research interests are broadly on issues at the intersection of ethics, epistemology, and feminist philosophy. The focus of her most current research is on the ethics and normativity of social and epistemic practices, from a non-ideal approach. Website: nicoledular.weebly.com. Contact: nicoledular@gmail.com.

Kok Yong Lee is an associate professor in the department of philosophy at National Chung Cheng University, Minhsiung, Taiwan (R.O.C.). His research focuses on epistemology and philosophy of language. Contact: kokyonglee.mu@gmail.com.

Timothy Perrine is currently a Post-Doctoral Researcher at Wuhan University in Wuhan China. He has published over a dozen and a half papers in various areas including epistemology, metaphysics, ethics, and philosophy of religion. Contact: timperrine@gmail.com.

James Simpson is a Ph.D. student at the University of Florida. His interests are in epistemology, ethics, metaphysics, the philosophy of action, and the philosophy of religion. His most pressing current research project involves a dissertation-length defense of a novel analysis of knowledge. Contact: simpson.james@ufl.edu.

Logos & Episteme

Gregory Stoutenburg is a Visiting Assistant Professor of Philosophy at York College of Pennsylvania. His research focuses on knowledge and justified belief, with a particular interest in demanding standards for knowledge. He has published on the nature of luck in defense of the view that luck is partly an epistemic matter. Contact: gstoutenburg@ycp.edu.