

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Scott F. Aikin is Associate Professor and Director of Undergraduate Studies in Philosophy at Vanderbilt University. He specializes in epistemology, argumentation theory, and ancient philosophy. He is the author of Epistemology and the Regress Problem (Routledge, 2011), Evidentialism and the Will to Believe (Bloomsbury, 2014), and Political Argument in a Polarized Age (with Robert Talisse, Polity, 2020). Contact: scott.f.aikin@vanderbilt.edu.

Robb Dunphy is a Junior Research Fellow at the Maimonides Centre for Advanced Studies at the University of Hamburg. He previously taught philosophy at the University of Sussex. His research is especially concentrated on Pyrrhonian scepticism, German Idealism, and epistemology. His published work has appeared in journals including the Review of Metaphysics, Hegel Bulletin, and Studies in Social and Political Thought. Contact: robbdunphy@gmail.com.

Domingos Faria holds a FCT junior researcher position (CEECIND/01066/2017) at the Center of Philosophy of the University of Lisbon (CFUL), where he develops a project entitled “The Epistemology of Complex Disagreement Among Social Groups” at the LanCog group. Affiliation: LanCog, Centre of Philosophy, University of Lisbon. Contact: domingofaria@campus.ul.pt.

Thomas Grundmann is professor of philosophy at the Department of Philosophy, University of Cologne. Much of his research focuses on themes from general epistemology, a priori knowledge, philosophical methodology, and social epistemology. His most recent research projects concern the epistemology of disagreement, the epistemology of fake news and post truth, and epistemic authority. Some relevant publications include: “How to Respond Rationally to Peer Disagreement: The Preemption View” (Philosophical Issues, forthcoming), “Why Disagreement-Based Scepticism Cannot Escape the Challenge of Self-Defeat” (Episteme, forthcoming), “Doubts about Philosophy? The Alleged Challenge from Disagreement” (in Knowledge, Virtue, and Action: Putting Epistemic Virtues to Work, 2013). Contact: thomas.grundmann@uni-koeln.de.

Perry Hendricks is a PhD student at Purdue University. His primary interests are epistemology, philosophy of religion, and bioethics. He has published articles in such journals as Pacific Philosophical Quarterly, The Journal of the American Philosophical Association, and Bioethics. Contact: ampchendricks@gmail.com.

Robert Michels studied philosophy in Constance, Germany and Geneva, Switzerland, where he also received his PhD after defending a thesis on the Essentialist Theory of Modality written under the supervision of Kevin Mulligan. He is currently a postdoc at the Università della Svizzera italiana within the SNSF-funded project “Identity in Cognitive Science, Quantum Mechanics, and Metaphysics.” He works on a range of topics which are mostly connected to modality or indeterminacy in metaphysics, philosophy of language, epistemology, general philosophy of science, and the history of analytic philosophy. Website: <http://www.robert-michels.de>. Contact: robert.michels@usi.ch.

Diana Sofronieva obtained her PhD from the University of Leeds, UK. Her primary research interests concern empathy, moral character, and friendship. You can find her online at sofronieva.com. Contact: hello@sofronieva.com.

Billy Wheeler is Research Fellow in the Department of Philosophy (Zhuhai) at Sun Yat-Sen University. He completed his PhD in the Department of History and Philosophy of Science at the University of Cambridge in 2013. Billy is the author of the book Idealization and the Laws of Nature (Springer, 2018) and has published articles in the journals Theoria, Filozofia Nauki, Manuscrito, Principia, and Techné. His main work investigates the epistemological, metaphysical and ethical implications of emerging technologies. He has particular interests in virtual reality, robotics and big data. Contact: billy.wheeler@cantab.net.