

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Youssef Aguisoul has received his B.A. and M.A. in philosophy respectively from Kennesaw State University, U.S.A., and the University of Tartu, Estonia. Currently, he is a PhD student in philosophy at the University of Lisbon. His main philosophical concentration lies in analytic metaphysics. His current dissertation is on the nature of substance or ordinary particulars; therein, he develops a newfangled substratum theory of substance. Aside, he has keen interest in epistemology (particularly social epistemology), in metaethics, and in theology. Contact: aguisoul@edu.ulisboa.pt.

Elliott R. Crozat, Ph.D., teaches philosophy and the humanities at Purdue University Global (USA). His areas of research include epistemology, philosophy of religion, axiology, and moral philosophy. He has published on the meaning of life, the nature of propositional knowledge, and the problem of evil (forthcoming). Contact: ecrozat@purdueglobal.edu.

John C. Duff has a bachelor's degree in philosophy (morality, politics and law concentration) from Arizona State University. John is presently pursuing a graduate degree in sociology at Arizona State University, where he has commenced on a culminating research project, examining the effects of private-sector labor unions' commitment to neoliberal ideology on the decades-long decline in private-sector labor union density. His forthcoming paper will argue—from a neo-Gramscian theoretical perspective—that the survival of private-sector labor unions necessitates the abandonment of neoliberal common-sense. John's research interests are socio-political philosophy and analyzing the epistemic implications of sociological theory as it pertains to both practice and praxis. Contact: JohnD366@outlook.com.

Jumbly Grindrod is a lecturer with the philosophy department at the University of Reading. His research focuses on issues in philosophy of language and epistemology, and particularly where the two intersect on the matter of context-sensitivity. His more recent research is particularly focused on how corpus linguistics and computational linguistics can shed new light on philosophical questions. He has published in a number of philosophical journals, including Episteme, Mind & Language, Ergo, and Metaphilosophy. Contact: j.grindrod@reading.ac.uk.

M. Hosein M.A. Khalaj is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at the Sharif University of Technology and a research fellow at the Iranian Institute of Philosophy. His research interests concern knowledge-how, skill, virtue epistemology, and dispositions in epistemology. Khalaj has recently authored two papers in these areas for Synthese and Erkenntnis. Basil Müller is a PhD-Student at the University of Bern, a member of the Swiss National Science Foundation Project “Explaining Human Nature — Empirical and Ideological Dimensions” and an associated member of the Zurich Epistemology Group on Rationality (“ZEGRa”). Currently, Basil is mainly interested in questions pertaining to the evolution of cooperation, culture, and norms, as well as social epistemology, and the philosophy of psychology. He recently published a paper arguing that research on the evolution of a social-learning mechanism is compatible with an epistemic error theory (“Normativity as a Kind of Conformity,” Kriterion, 2020). Hitoshi Omori is a Junior-Professor of Nonclassical Logic at the Department of Philosophy I, Ruhr-University Bochum (Germany). His main interest is in nonclassical as well as philosophical logic, including paraconsistent, many-valued and modal logics, and dialetheism. Contact: Hitoshi.Omori@rub.de.

Heinrich Wansing is a Professor of Logic and Epistemology at the Department of Philosophy I, Ruhr-University Bochum (Germany). He has been working mainly on philosophical logic, including the semantics and proof theory of modal, constructive, paraconsistent, many-valued, and other nonclassical logics. Moreover, he is the Editor-in-Chief of the book series Trends in Logic (Springer), a managing editor of the journal Studia Logica, and a member of a number of other editorial boards of logic and philosophy journals.
