NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Darren Bradley is Professor of Metaphysics and Epistemology at the University of Leeds. He works on a wide range of topics in metaphysics, epistemology and normativity, and is especially interested in places where they overlap. Contact: bradleydarren@gmail.com.

John C. Duff is a PhD student at the University of Arizona, Forbes School of Business and Technology, researching the effects of transformative justice on conventional workplace justice models and perceptions, converging on overcoming oppression, domination, and exploitation as antecedents to organizational justice. John's research interests include socioeconomic democracy, epistemology, analytic philosophy, and organizational ethics. Contact: JohnD366@outlook.com.

Eric Gilbertson is an assistant professor of philosophy at Texas State University who earned his PhD from Cornell University. Much of his research is in epistemology, but his philosophical interests are broad, ranging from the purely theoretical and abstract to the practical and applied. Recently, he has published articles on moral subjectivism, statistical lives, and the value of extreme sport for nonhuman animals. Contact: eng18@txstate.edu.

Deke Caiñas Gould earned his Ph.D. at Syracuse University in 2011. He is currently continuing lecturer of philosophy at Augustana College. His main areas of research interests are in the epistemology and metaphysics of logic, and he has interests in bioethics and ethics of technology. In addition to teaching and advising, including the Socratic Society and the Go & Chill Out Club at Augustana, he regularly organizes and hosts public philosophy sessions, including the filmosofia series at Rozz-Tox in Rock Island, IL. Contact: goulddc@gmail.com.

Jinhua He (ORCID: 0000-0001-9506-1188) is currently pursuing a Ph.D. in the Department of Philosophy, the University of Hong Kong. His main research interests are epistemology and the philosophy of language. Contact: realjinhua@gmail.com.

James Simpson has a Ph.D. in philosophy from the University of Florida. He has published papers in Synthese, Philosophical Quarterly, Erkenntnis, Analytic Philosophy, Philosophia, Acta Analytica, Logos & Episteme, International Journal for Philosophy of Religion, Res Publica, among others. He currently teaches philosophy at the University of Florida. Contact: simpson.james@ufl.edu.

Izak Tait is a Ph.D. student at Auckland University of Technology, where his research centres on philosophy of mind, meta-ethics, and the emerging field of AI consciousness. His work involves investigating how consciousness may manifest in non-human entities, with a focus on speculative models, including artificial intelligence, organisational systems, and extraterrestrial forms of cognition. He is a member of the Xeno-Consciousness Research Society, a multidisciplinary group committed to advancing research into the nature and boundaries of our understanding of consciousness beyond traditional paradigms. Contact: izaks.tait@gmail.com.